

I was born and brought up in Lagos, Nigeria. I am from the South Western part of Nigeria which is the Yoruba tribe. I am the first of the four daughters my parents gave birth to. I like listening to music and socializing.

My passion for education was inspired by my mum, I was greatly motivated by her zeal and passion for education even though she was not privileged to study to the level of education she desired. Both my primary and secondary education was in Nigeria. I obtained BSc in Metallurgical and Materials Engineering in 2008. After the completion of the compulsory one year National Youth Service Corp, I enroll for MSc in Metallurgical and Materials Engineering and graduated as the best female student in 2011. Based on my performance I was offered Lecturing job at the Department of Metallurgical and Materials Engineering, University of Lagos Nigeria. I currently work at the department and plan to return there on completion of my PhD.
